Introduction

WHAT YOU WILL LEARN IN THIS BOOK:

- How to overcome objections.
- What customer objections actually mean.
- Which objections to address, which to ignore.
- There are really only three types of objections.
- How to handle an "outside" objection versus and "inside" objection, even if it's the same objection.
- How to proactively neutralize objections before they even come up.
- How to use customer benefits to make every customer feel good about not getting exactly what they wanted.
- How to use one objection as a way to set up the entire transaction and get the customer to agree with you in the first five minutes.

Once you learn the techniques in this book, you will notice that you get significantly less objections than you have in the past. You may only get one per transaction because of your confident leadership. Your customers will realize that their objections don't derail the process; and that you are comfortable to work with.

Three Types of Objections

The three types of objections are:

1. Smokescreens
2. Back doors
3. Contingency to sale

Learn how to affirm the customer's “reason”, and roll right through it as if you are conducting a normal conversation. It only becomes a big deal when we make it one or if the customer can tell it made you uncomfortable. As soon as they feel discomfort they will go into attack mode so you need to act confident. Confidence comes with being prepared, repetitions, and previous wins.

SMOKE SCREENS OR JERK REACTIONS are things people say almost right when they get out of their car. They'll say something like "I'm just looking" or "I just came to look at this real quick." They are basically shooing you away. Most of the time they don't even realize what they did. Ten minutes later they'll go try to find help and then get upset that no one is helping them. Handling these are simple; don't spend too much time on this or over think it. Just use their words and roll right thru

EXAMPLE OF SMOKE SCREEN OBJECTION:

Sales: (Full meet and greet)

Customer: Hi. We're just looking today.

Sales: Great! Do you want to look at new or pre owned today?

Customer: Used

EXAMPLE OF SMOKE SCREEN OBJECTION:

Sales: Great. We have those right over here come with me, by the way who's the lucky getting a new car?

Customer: It's for both of us.

In most cases just use the same words that the customer used, and roll right through it as if you are conducting a normal conversation. It only becomes a big deal when we make it one or if the customer can tell it made you uncomfortable. As soon as they feel discomfort they will go into attack mode so you need to act confident. Confidence comes with being prepared, repetitions, and previous wins.

EXAMPLE OF SMOKE SCREEN/WORST CASE SCENARIO (RARE):

Customer: Is it ok if we look around by ourselves?

Sales: Of course, but as soon as another salesman sees you he is going to assume you need help and come over to greet you.

EXAMPLE OF SMOKE SCREEN/WORST CASE SCENARIO (RARE):

Customer: Is it ok if we look around by ourselves?

Sales: Of course, but as soon as another salesman sees you he is going to assume you need help and come over to greet you.

Sales: Besides, I have all the keys and can answer questions for you. For example, where to locate a certain car. By the way who's the lucky getting a new car?

Customer: It's for me

Sales: Well congratulations! Do you have a certain vehicle in mind?

Customer: I saw online you guys had -----

EXAMPLE OF SMOKE SCREEN/WORST CASE SCENARIO (RARE):

Keep rolling through the sales process. Address/bridge/forward. It's important to transition quickly once you address and bridge, this basically closes the chapter on that part of the conversation.

Your goal here is to lead the customer back onto the path to buying a car.

BACK DOOR/EXIT SET UPS are the most common objections. These are almost always given in the first 60 seconds of the transaction shortly after the meet & greet. These are white lies 99% of the time and indicate fear of the unknown. Customers rarely hear anything good about salespeople so they have their predetermined thoughts about us. They tend to set up their "way out" early. These are not meant to be overcome and this is where a lot of deals are lost because the salesman tries to fix something that isn't real. These are only meant to be acknowledged, giving the customer permission to use their way out whenever needed.

How do you know if it's a real objection or a back door? If it comes up shortly after the meet & greet. 100% of the time assume it's a back door unless they bring it up a second time without prompting. Once you "give them permission" to use their back door, never talk bring up again.

EXAMPLES OF BACK DOORS:

1. This is the first place I've stopped.
2. I'm not buying anything today.
3. I don't have a lot of time, just want to look at it.
4. I have 2 more to look at before I make a decision.
5. I'm looking for a friend.
6. I'll need my wife (rarely this early is this used but it happens).
7. I don't want to waste your time.v

HOW TO HANDLE BACK DOOR OBJECTIONS:

Address/bridge/move forward. The transition is important here. Once I bridge (by giving permission) then I move forward. If I stop after the bridge and don't close that chapter they think it's their turn for rebuttal. Now I have to overcome that rebuttal. Move forward. There is a full chapter on objections & how to address/bridge/move on.

EXAMPLE 1, HANDLING BACK DOOR OBJECTIONS :

Sales: (Full meet & greet exchange names

Customer: I don't have a lot of time I just want to look at it real quick.

Sales: No problem. Let's get as much done as we can. You let me know when time is up. By the way who is the lucky one getting a new car?

EXAMPLE 2, HANDLING BACK DOOR OBJECTIONS :

Customer: This is the first place I've stopped, I've got two more to look at.

Sales: No problem. Thank you for giving me the opportunity to show you around. What vehicle did you come to here to see?

Don't try to fix the objection- you may make something out of nothing. Just acknowledge the customer's "way out". Your customer can now relax knowing he/she can use their "way out" if needed and you can now work your way thru the steps.

CONTINGENCY TO SALE OBJECTIONS are what we find solutions for. Examples are: "I need something with better gas mileage for my new job. I drive 100 miles a day," or "We need a third seat. Right now we take two cars when we have all the kids." These are the wants and needs we find in our fact finding questions. These are what bought them in. We normally don't get to these contingencies until we get through one smoke screen, perhaps followed by one back door. Then we get to the real reason.

Let's say the customer brings up a backdoor. transition that into a contingency to sale (cts) and find a solution. However, push that solution into the booth(inside). DON'T try to fix it outside. Push the deal forward and close inside. Don't get trapped trying to overcome objections outside, it reduces your chances of winning.

EXAMPLE 1, HANDLING CTS OBJECTIONS :

Customer: Well, like I said earlier I have two other cars to look at first . Can I get your card?

Most salesman panic and start trying to overcome and dropping price to try to entice them. Instead try this:

Sales: No problem at all. While you're here let me get you my best price, payment and rate so whether you buy from us or them you will know that you are getting your best deal. Fair enough?

They agree 100% of the time because they heard "I'm going to get you everything and let you leave with it. What I heard is "yes" to coming inside and giving me a full credit application so I can get you your lowest payment and rate!! (push the deal forward)

EXAMPLE 2, HANDLING CTS OBJECTIONS :

Customer: I need my wife. I can bring her back Saturday. You have a card? I'll ask for Sales: No problem at all. While you're here, let me get you everything you'll need to talk with her- like your best price, payment, and

Customer: Will you need to run my cred-

Sales: No. We have a credit chart that will get us really close. If you like what you see we will go from there. Fair enough?

Customer: Yes, that's fine.

Sales: Great, come with me. (Push the deal forward. Your chances of closing the deal are much greater inside the building.)

Common Objection Milestones

THE FIRST OBJECTION MILESTONE usually occurs right at hello. These are smoke screens or knee jerk reactions. Move forward with your questions.

EXAMPLE OF OVERCOMING FIRST OBJECTIONS:

Sales: Welcome to ABC Motors. My name is Curtis. What are you looking for today?

Customer: I'm just looking.

Sales: Not a problem. Did you come to look at something new or preowned? Or do you have a specific vehicle in mind?

Customer: Where are your used cars?

Sales: Right this way, Sir. By the way, who is the lucky one getting a new car? (Just roll thought it and move on to your next steps. Don't ask them to explain themselves.)

THE SECOND OBJECTION MILESTONE is usually early in steps 3&4 of your sales process. This is usually a backdoor; a way out for the customer to avoid making a decision to buy.

EXAMPLE OF OVERCOMING SECOND OBJECTION:

Customer: I'm not buying anything today. I'm still a couple of months away from buying.

Sales: Not a problem. Let's get you everything you need today and hopefully when you're ready you will do business with me. Fair enough?

Sales: (We just want to acknowledge their way out. Don't try to fix this yet, its probably fake and the more we talk about it the more real we make it. Just acknowledge/bridge/move forward.)

Customer: That's fair.

Sales: Perfect. Do you have a vehicle in mind you want to see? (Acknowledge/bridge/move forward.)

ANOTHER EXAMPLE:

Customer: I don't have a lot of time.

Sales: Not a problem. Let's get as much done in the time you allow. Just let me know when time is up. (You are just acknowledging their way out, that's all they want hear. Don't try to start fixing and overcoming. You don't know if it's real, so let's not make it real.)

THE THIRD OBJECTION MILESTONE happens while pulling the vehicle out of the line for the display. For every objection from here forward, use customer benefits and continue moving forward to the next step.

EXAMPLE OF OVERCOMING THE THIRD OBJECTION:

Sales: Let me pull this out so we can take a better look at it.

Customer: No, that's ok, you don't have to pull it out.

Sales: We park the cars close in order to save space. We don't want to risk any door dings. It only takes a second-I'll be right back. You can wait right there in the shade. I'll pull it over there.

Customer: Ok. (This isn't a hard objection to overcome. It just takes persistence.)

THE FOURTH OBJECTION MILESTONE is usually regarding the price. Now that they are looking at the car they'll throw out a low ball number just to see if you'll bite on it. This objection is very common.

EXAMPLE OF OVERCOMING THE FOURTH OBJECTION:

Customer: I saw one down the street 2k cheaper, can you match it?

Sales: I know price is important. Before we part I'll get you my best price, payment, and rate. First, we will drive it and if you like it, I'll get you all the information. Fair enough?

Customer: Yep

MONEY OBJECTIONS are the best because they allow you to trade. You gave them what they wanted plus more in exchange for a test drive, coming inside, allowing you to get their information, and running a credit check. They agreed to all that when they said "yes" to fair enough.

THE FIFTH OBJECTION MILESTONE is usually regarding the test drive. In most cases, if you already addressed the money objection, there will be no issue here. But sometimes they'll decline the test drive. The real reason is they don't want to get emotionally attached to the vehicle, but they tend to make an excuse. Use customer benefits to address why they should test drive.

EXAMPLE OF OVERCOMING THE FIFTH OBJECTION:

Sales: Let me show you the best part. Let's take it for a spin.

Customer: No thank you. If I can't get to the payment I need, there is no point in driving it. Can we find out what the payments are first?

Sales: Mr. Customer, if we go inside and after 30 minutes get the payment right where you want it, and if you don't like the car after the test drive, would you still buy it just because we got to your payment?

Customer: No, of course not.

Sales: I wouldn't expect you to! Let's take it around the block and make sure it's worth making a payment on. I'll grab the keys, I'll be right back.

Customer: Ok.

KEY TAKEAWAY: As long as it benefits the customer they'll play along, if your response only benefits you or the dealer, they won't.

THE SIXTH OBJECTION MILESTONE will usually occur during the transition from outside the store to inside. This is where customer feels like they got enough information and will procrastinate on the purchase if you allow them to. It is best to get in front of it and lead the process.

EXAMPLE OF OVERCOMING THE SIXTH OBJECTION:

Sales: (On the test drive, coming back to the store.) So, what do you think of the way it drives?

Customer: Drives great! I like it.

Sales: Great. Tell you what. When we get back, I'll show you what it takes to own it. You can tell me "yes", "no", or "I'd like to think about it." I'm okay with any of these three responses. Fair enough?

Customer: Yes.

EXAMPLE OF FAILING TO OVERCOME THE SIXTH OBJECTION:

Sales: (On the test drive, coming back to the store.) So, what do you think of the way it drives?

Customer: Drives great! I like it.

Sales: Perfect. If we can get it to work within your budget, are you ready to take it home today?

Customer: Not today. I just wanted to see it and get a feel for it. But let me get your card. If I decide to go this route, I'll definitely ask for you.

KEY TAKEAWAY: In the first example, we made it easy for the customer to say "yes" by giving them a way out. But, they also agreed to come inside, sit down, and give us a credit application. In the second example, we tried the trial close outside and it backfired making it very tough to move forward again. Sell on our feet, close in the seat.

Common Outside Objections

SHORT CUT:

1. Assume any objection within the first minute is a back door. Don't try to fix it, just give them their way out. That's what they want.
2. Once you are past the objection, do not bring it up again. Be careful of body language that signals that you feel rushed.
3. Remember we "sell on our feet, close in the seat." Push the deal forward outside. Don't try to close outside.
4. Devise two or three ways to overcome each common objection. Customers "program" their answers, so if you continue to say the same thing each time, you'll get the same answers from the customer. Sometimes just slightly changing the wording will get a new response.

Most of the objections you deal with outside of the store are smoke screens and back doors. Treat them that way until proven real.

EXAMPLES FOR "I DON'T HAVE A LOT OF TIME":

Sales response #1: No problem. Let's get as much done in the time you allow. Just let me know when time is up. Fair enough?

Sales response #2: What would you like to get done while you're here? Great. I'll be happy to help you with that. (Move forward to the next step)

Sales response #3: To save time, would it be okay to ask you a couple of questions? (Then go right into investigating in steps 3 & 4.

EXAMPLES FOR "LET'S SEE THE PAYMENT BEFORE TEST DRIVING":

Sales response #1: No problem, but let me ask: if we get to the payment you want, would you still buy it if you didn't like the car after the test drive? (Customer says no). Of course you wouldn't, and I wouldn't expect you to. Let's take it around the block and make sure this is right for you. I'll grab the keys.

Sales response #2: Would you agree that there is no right payment on the wrong car? Let's make sure this is the right car for you. I'll grab the keys.

Sales response #3: I know payment is important. It's important to everybody buying a car. Before we part today, not only will I find you your best payment, I will get you the lowest rate, and find the most money for your trade in. First let's drive it and make sure you like it. When we get back, I'll get you all of the information. Fair enough? (When they say yes to fair enough, they agreed to the test drive, coming inside, and running credit. This works on all money objections outside)

EXAMPLES FOR "LET ME TALK TO MY WIFE/BRING MY WIFE BACK":

We may have to overcome this later, or we may not. Right now, push the deal forward and assume they are not telling the whole truth, that this is a back door.

Sales response #1: No problem. While you're here, let me get you all the information needed to talk to your wife. Hopefully, when you are ready, you will choose to do business with me. Fair enough?

Sales response #2: Not a problem. Let me ask you: do you think she will be more concerned about what you are driving or what it's going to cost? (cost) Great. Come with me. I'll get you my best price, payment, and rate to go over with her. Come with me.

Sales response #3: If your wife is anything like mine, she probably doesn't like car lots, right? (nope) Ok. Let's get as much done without her here. That way, when you bring her in, she can get in and out quickly. Sound good?

EXAMPLES FOR "I SAW IT CHEAPER AT ANOTHER DEALERSHIP":

Sales response #1: I know price is important. Before we part today, I'll get you my best price, payment, and rate. First, let's test drive it to make sure you like it. When we get back, I'll get you all the information you need. Fair enough?

Sales response #2: I understand. I'd never expect you to pay more than you think it's worth. First, let's drive it to make sure you like it. When we get back then, we will present your offer. Come with me.

Sales response #3: I understand. We do use third party pricing to make sure we are priced below the market. That being said, we can make an offer once we drive it and make sure it's the right vehicle for you.

EXAMPLES FOR "I DON'T HAVE TIME FOR A TEST DRIVE. LET'S WORK THE NUMBERS FIRST":

Sales response #1: No problem. But I would hate to go inside and spend a half hour getting the numbers to your liking, and then you don't like the car after the test drive. Now, I have wasted an hour of your time when it only takes two minutes to take it around the block. Let's make sure it's worth your time. I'll grab the keys.

Sales response #2: Mr. Customer. Most of us would buy a $100 pair of shoes without trying them on. Let's not make that mistake on a $40,000 car. Let me grab the keys and we will just take it around the block. Fair enough?

Sales response #3: Mr. Customer, let's save you some time and take two minutes to drive it around the block and make sure it's the right vehicle for you. I'll grab the keys.

EXAMPLES FOR "THIS IS THE FIRST PLACE I'VE STOPPED. I STILL HAVE TWO MORE TO LOOK AT":

Sales response #1: That's awesome. Thank you for giving us the first opportunity to talk to you. What vehicle jumped out to you here? (continue the steps through the sale.)

Sales response #2: Perfect. While you're here, I'll get you my best price, payment, and rate so you'll know that you're getting the best deal whether it's from me or someone else. Fair enough?

Sales response #3: While you're here, I'll get you everything you need to compare. Hopefully when you are ready, you will choose to do business with me. Fair enough?

EXAMPLES FOR "I WANT MY TRADE VALUE FIRST":

Sales response #1: I know trade value is important to you. It's important to everyone when buying a car. Before we part, not only will I get you the most money for your trade, I'll find out your lowest payment, and best rate. First let's pick out a car, and when we get back, I'll get that information. Fair enough?

Sales response #2: I understand. Let me ask you this: is getting the most for your trade the most important thing or is getting the best deal on the new vehicle? Or is it both? (both) Ok. Great. Let's save you some time and pick out a car, then I can get you the best numbers on both. (continue through the sale process.)

Sales response #3: (If they insist, and you can't get around it, try this as a last resort: Get your trade sheet completed with the customer, then take it to your manager) Mr. Customer, we send bids to 6 different wholesalers to get the highest bid for you. This takes approximately 15 minutes. While we are waiting on that, let's go pick out a vehicle to save you some time. (continue the process)

EXAMPLES FOR "WHAT'S YOUR BEST PRICE?":

Sales response #1: I know price is important to you. It's important to everyone when buying a car. Before we part today, not only will I get you the best price, I'll get you your lowest payment and rate as well. First let's drive it and make sure it's the right fit for you. When we get back, I'll get you all of that information. Fair enough?

Sales response #2: Mr. Customer. I'd never expect you to pay more than it's worth. Let's take it for a quick spin. When we get back, I'll get you my best numbers. Fair enough?

Sales response #3: Mr. Customer, would you agree that there is no right price on the wrong car? Let's take it for a drive and make sure that it's the right car for you. When we get back, I'll get you the best deal. Come with me.

EXAMPLES FOR "I'M NOT BUYING ANYTHING TODAY":

Sales response #1: Not a problem. Let's get you everything you need. When you're ready to buy, hopefully you will buy from me. Fair enough?

Sales response #2: No problem. It sounds to me like you just want to pick something out and get some information on it. Is that right? ("yes") Great. I'll be happy to help you with that. (continue with the sales process)

Sales response #3: Of course, I realize that you need to think about it. I haven't given you enough information to help you. What I'd like to do is give you a quick five minute proposal with all the facts and figures. Then you just let me know what you want to do from there. Fair enough?

EXAMPLES FOR "I DON'T NEED TO DRIVE IT":

Sales response #1: (feel, felt, found) I understand. I used to think the same thing until I sold a woman a new car just like the one she already owned, but 4 years newer. She said that she didn't need to drive it before she bought it. Now she says that the seats are not the same and that they kill her back. Now she's paying on a car she doesn't like. I said that I'd never let that happen to another customer. I'll go grab the keys. (third party stories close deals.)

Sales response #2: Would you agree that comfort and performance are important factors in this decision? ("yes") We want to make sure you like how the car rides. Let's take it around the block and make sure it's the right fit for you.

Sales response #3: (Humor) There are only two things for free at a car dealership: test drives and coffee. I'll get you the coffee when we get back. Hop in!

EXAMPLES FOR "YOU DON'T HAVE THE COLOR I WANT":

Sales response #1: Outside of color, is the equipment to your liking? ("yes") Perfect. It will drive the same way no matter what the color. Let's take it for a test drive. When we get back, I will see about getting you the color you want. I'll grab the key.

Sales response #2: Do you think for the right deal that you could be a little color blind? ("depends on the deal") Great. Let's drive it and make sure you like it. When we get back I'll get you the best deal. Of course it's up to you from there. Fair enough?

EXAMPLES FOR "I NEVER BUY ON THE FIRST STOP":

Sales response #1: I understand. Let me ask you this: You saw the car online, correct? ("yes") Most customers today shop two weeks online on average. They tend to go to the dealership to buy the one they picked out. We are probably not your first stop. Before you say yes or no, let me show you all the numbers. Then you can let me know what you would like to do. Fair enough?

Sales response #2: I understand. Before you take off, let me get you my best price, payment, and interest rate. You can tell me yes, or no, or that you want to think about it. I'm okay with any of those decisions. Fair enough?

EXAMPLES FOR "I'M GOING TO WAIT FOR RATES TO COME DOWN":

Sales response #1: Do you know how rates and pricing work together? ("no") Every time rate goes up, prices come down. And every time rates come down, prices go up. It's always been this way: buy when the rates are high for best price and refinance when rates come down. Let me show you what this looks like.

Sales response #2: You can always refinance the rate and take advantage of today's low pricing, but you can never refinance principal. Let me show you how low I can get your payment and you let me know from there. Fair enough?

Sales response #3: Actually, rates going up is the best thing that happened. ("why is that?") Remember a few years ago when cars were going for 20K over MSRP and used cars cost more than new cars? ("yes") Rates going up are the exact thing that brought prices down. Take the low pricing and refinance when the rates go back down.

Framing to Customer Benefits

1. Frame to the customer's benefit EVERY time we overcome an objection or push the deal forward.
2. It's never about you, your boss, or your store. It is only about the customers, and what benefits the.
3. If the customer believes what you are offering is to their benefit, they'll play along. As soon as they think that you are suggesting something for your benefit, they won't do it, no matter how sweet the deal is.

Framing everything to the customer's benefit makes it easy to say yes, and hard to say no.

EXAMPLE #1 FRAMING TO CUSTOMER'S BENEFIT

Customer: I don't have time to drive it. Let's see the numbers.

DON'T:

Sales: My boss isn't going to work numbers until we drive it. (No customer benefit).

DO:

Sales: I understand. But if we go inside and work out all the numbers and then you don't like the way it drives, I then wasted an hour and a half of your time. It only takes 5 minutes to take around the block. I'll go get the keys. ("Your time" is the customer's benefit)

EXAMPLE #2 FRAMING TO CUSTOMER'S BENEFIT

Customer: This is the first place I've stopped. I have two more dealerships to go to.

DON'T:

Sales: What other car do you want to see? What if I got you the right deal? (Don't lead with solving the objection that is probably not real).

DO:

Sales: No problem. Let me get you all the information on this car and hopefully when you are ready, you'll choose to do business with me. Fair enough? (Letting them have a way out, and getting them the information on the car is to the customer's benefit)

EXAMPLE #3 FRAMING TO CUSTOMER'S BENEFIT

Customer: I want my trade value first.

DON'T:

Sales: My boss won't give me trade numbers until we pick out a car. (Never "I", "us", or "my boss". Always frame to customer's benefit with "you" or "yours").

DO:

Sales: I understand. Let me ask you: Are you just wanting the most for your trade or the best price on our car, or both? (both). Great, let me save you some time. Let's pick out a car and I'll get you both at the same time. Fair enough? (Letting them have a way out, and getting them the information on the car is to the customer's benefit)

This image shows a single sheet of white paper with horizontal blue ruling lines. The lines are evenly spaced and run across the width of the page. There is no handwriting or other markings on the paper.

Proactive Set Ups

Avoid or counter objections by proactively setting up the sales process.

EXAMPLE #1 PROACTIVE SET UP RIGHT BEFORE THE WALK

Sales: Mr. Customer. Let me tell you why more people in this area buy their used cars right here. (social confirmation). All of our used cars go through a 120 point inspection and whatever needs to be fixed, replaced, or repaired is done before we bring it out for sale. The crazy thing is only about half the vehicles pass our inspections. The ones that don't are sent back to the auction and you'll end up seeing them on other lots, often cheaper. Let me go grab the keys. (We just proved that we value quality first. This statement kills several objections before they come up, and is a nice set up for gross. You can fall back on this statement when they ask for a discount.

EXAMPLE #2 PROACTIVE SET UP ON THE WAY BACK FROM THE TEXT DRIVE

Sales: Mr. Customer, how do you like the drive? (I like it) Great. Tell you what. When we get back, I'm going to show you what it takes to own it. You can tell me yes, no, or you want some time to think about it. I'm okay with any of those three decisions. Fair enough? (When the customer responds "yes" to this statement, they are agreeing not only to getting the information, and time to think about it, they also said yes to coming inside and giving you all of their information. Now we have everything we need to sell a car. This really prevents hang ups like the customer refusing to come inside or to give us their information.)

EXAMPLE #3 PROACTIVE SET UPS FOR STEPS 3 & 4 INVESTIGATION AND COMMUNICATION

LUCKY ONE:

Sales: So, who's the lucky one getting a new car? (This puts a smile on their face, but also removes the objection later that the car is not for them.)

HOW LONG:

Sales: Great. How long have you been thinking of getting a new car? (This gives you an idea of how ready they are to buy, but also removes the "I just started looking" objection later in the process.)

WHAT IS IT:

Sales: What is it about his car that jumped out to you? (This points you to their hot buttons, which guides your walk around and helps you hold gross when they ask for a dis-

WHERE'S YOUR FIRST TRIP?

Sales: So, where are you taking this car on your first trip? (This raises emotions as they start taking ownership. Of ten they will start telling you exactly where they are going. They may already have a trip planned for the new vehicle. This helps you hold gross later.)

Proactively Advancing Sales

Advance the steps of the sales process by using customer benefits to avoid the three most common objections.

PULLING THE VEHICLE OUT

Sales: I am going to pull the vehicle out to avoid any door dings or scratches. (This strategy helps avoid the common objection of the customer not wanting to test drive in order to avoid getting emotionally attached to the car.)

SETTING UP THE TEST DRIVE

Sales: I want you to pay attention to how quickly it accelerates, so when you are at the stop sign to get on the freeway. (This strategy can help you avoid the common customer objection of wanting to skip the test drive.)

Sales: Before we finish today, I want to get you your best price, payment, and interest rate so that when you are ready to buy, you have everything you need. Fair enough? (This strategy can help you avoid the common customer objection of wanting to skip coming inside to give their information and work the numbers. They typically want to ask for your card, and buy themselves time to procrastinate about finalizing the purchase.)

Tips and Tricks

1. Stay calm. Your customers read body language. If they think you are uncomfortable with an objection, they will press their advantage.
2. Identify what type of objection it is before answering. Never try to overcome something outside that can be addressed and bridged.
3. Remember that the goal outside is to get them through the steps to the sale, not to try to close them.
4. Less is more. Don't write a book when a sentence will do.
5. Don't hold them to it. If they say they have to look at three more cars, don't ask about the other cars. Give them their way out, and don't bring it back up.
6. Once you address and bridge, you must transition/ move forward, or they will think it is their turn for rebuttal . Moving forward puts a stop to that.
7. Don't get trapped into negotiating a deal outside.

Tips and Tricks

8. Always focus on what you have control of. Why would I keep talking about a car I don't have for sale? If they liked it that much, they would be at the other dealership. Focus on what you have. Why keep asking about someone who is not present? Focus on the person in front of you.
9. Never let a past experience make you think you know the ending of the present experience. Each deal is unique.
10. Don't call out the customer when you catch them in a lie. Give them a way out so they can save face. This provides a way to move forward.
11. Don't let the customer persuade you to skip any steps. Assume that you will encounter objections in every transaction. Your job is to persuade the customer to go through each step.

WHY OBJECTIONS ARE A GREAT THING:

When customers have objections, they are essentially giving you the keys to their unique point of view. Salesmen can use the information gleaned from the objections to lead the sales process so that the customer feels like a winner.

OBJECTIONS=SALES:

- Use this book to discover the real reasons behind common objections.
- Learn how to lead the sale to reduce or even eliminate common objections
